How to Help Children Cope with Death

- Since death is a natural part of life, parents should talk to their children about the subject in a natural, conversational, factual style.
- The best education is an ongoing one.
- Answer questions as they arise.
- Provide honest information.
- Use the words "dead," "die" and "death." Avoid words like "lost" or "passed away," which might be misunderstood by a child.
- Ritualize the experience and allow children to say goodbye.

Just because a child doesn't talk about death, doesn't necessarily mean that they are handling it well. However, it does mean the child is handling it in his or her own way.

Children often express their emotions through behavior and play. They also process only a little at a time. It's very normal for them to be sad for a while, then jump up and start playing happily. The more a child grows up with a healthy understanding of death, the less fear that child will have. When parents try to protect their children from death by shielding them from the experience and from the rituals of mourning, children learn that death is a taboo, mysterious and fearful issue.

For more information on how to help children cope with death, feel free to browse the UnityPoint Hospice Grief Library, located at 290 Blairs Ferry Road NE in Cedar Rapids. It's open to the public Monday - Friday from 8 a.m. - 4:30 p.m.
